Despite the fact that media outlets

like the Daily Beast, Huffington Post, and USA Today are calling for the national party to do a complete disavowal of Donald Trump, he still holds the support of 40% of Republican voters. As noted, 40% of the party is still with Trump, and if he were to suffer a wipe-out in the primary, and fall from the race, that number would probably rise to 60% or more. That is, Trump has more support in the party than Mitt Romney had at this stage in the primary, which is well over a year ago. This means that the next time you see a mainstream media outlet, or members of the party start telling you how embarrassing this election is, you need to tell them: The media, who is demanding that Trump's supporters be thrown out of the Republican party are not only making themselves look foolish, but are also damaging the Republican party. The Republican party is not over, it is not dead. It is just taking a deep breath, and regrouping. If Trump is taken out of the race, and Ted Cruz or whoever is chosen to represent the party in the fall will lose, they will have no one to blame but themselves. Make the media and Republican leadership look like fools now. It will be even worse if they do not disavow Trump, because they will be responsible for the damage that the people they have been so critical of are able to inflict. Join the conversation!
