More details on the announcement are available on Adobe's website. Adobe s Photoshop Elements has always been a terrific way to quickly edit your photos when needed. But with the release of Elements 8, the program has an advanced twin brother in Adobe Photoshop Lightroom, a multifunctional (and free) photo-editing and organizing app. Photos have never looked or felt so crisp. As a free app, Lightroom is too good to pass up, but "Memory Keepers" can skip Adobe Photoshop and even Affinity Photo. Get my free guide (5 steps) to learn more here. The new version of Elements gives it a big boost. One of the program's strongest features is its video editing functions, and the time to watch your creations is fast. So if you're an avid user of videos of family happenings and celebrations that you want to share over social media, this could be a piece of software you use quite a bit. Images have never looked or felt so crisp. As a free app, and with its other great features, Lightroom is too good to pass up. Read my review on that program here.

We're still working out the details of the new features and functionality, but there will certainly be subjects that have already been previewed. For example, you can see a sample of the move tool in action live in Photoshop. Isochrone tools also appear to be a new addition in the next version. You can read tech preview details from the Photoshop team here. We also have an account of the UI refactor overview. We'll be discussing the product announcement live at Photoshop on the Web 2019 . We've also posted a sample of the features to our blog. You can also read the Adobe Blog announcement about the adoption. New for 2019 and 2020 is the discontinuation of Object Selection tool . The new feature will be the subject of a blog post next week, and in that post we'll be explaining the design journey for this tool and how we came up with the current functionality. That leads me on to the next new feature – the Selective image operations . We've been very focused on adopting new Photoshop features across plugins, and through those efforts, we have eliminated the need to rely on the image editor plugins. This is a big change, because the image plugins had become the hub for image editing in Photoshop and people were not using the browser for image editing. This will only be the case in the early 2020 Photoshop releases for Elements, when we will release the standalone application on Windows. As we move to the standalone Photoshop release, we will be publishing an API status page about the product, and we will be closely monitoring it to ensure we continue to adopt and improve the API status page to match the changes that we've made in the releases.
